In Our Lobby....

A letter from New York, N.Y., I began drawing about four years ago while living in Paris, where I came under the influence of Chagall, the Surrealists, and a school of painters little known in the United States - the Naifs.

As you will see, I have tried to employ their montage and distortion techniques in preference to the more "realistic" approaches, hoping to penetrate beneath the ordinary consciousness recording "reality"-(and finding there a child aware of the most miraculous things). This incredible realm within has been both the inspiration and subject of most of my drawings.

As for my training, I am self taught for the most part, although I have spent many hours absorbing the works of the masters in books and museums and did study for a while under a private teacher in Paris. I attended Ohio State University but studied literature there and first began to draw by doing illustrations for a book I had written, although I gradually found myself doing more drawing than writing.

When asked what is the social value of my work, I can only reply that I hope it will open in the viewer that secret vision of his own and, in helping him, help society to become more beautiful. Beyond that I have no message, unless it be a suggestion to return to inner beauty.

Yours sincerely,

David Falk, New York, N.Y.
